

Glenn Research Center: Morgan Miller quantitatively fit-tested Brandon Hale with an air purifying respirator to assure he had the right fit to perform his work safely.

Jet Propulsion Laboratory: An electrician wore proper Personal Protective Equipment — arc flash coverall, face shield and leather gloves — while working on a circuit breaker.

Stennis Space Center: Shelby Russel was photographed performing a daily inspection of an Automated External Defibrillator in Building 8100.

NASA Daily News

The Best Newspaper Across the Centers

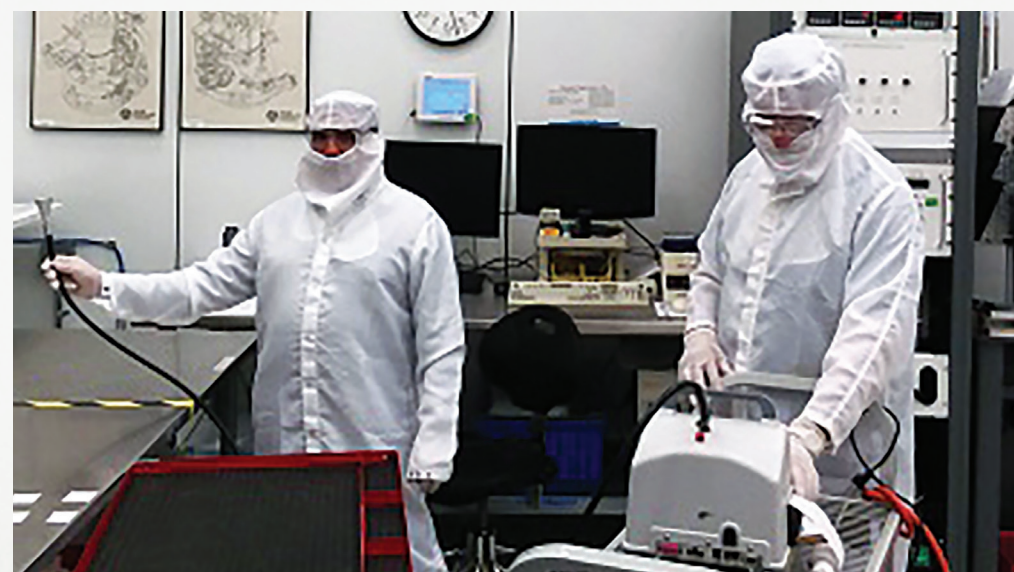

Today's Edition

Caught Doing Right Across the Agency

Wallops Flight Facility: Katie Cranor and Columbia Scientific Balloon personnel wore appropriate Personal Protective Equipment as they worked to inflate the balloon on the flight line in preparation for a scientific balloon launch in Wanaka, New Zealand.

Kennedy Space Center: The SpaceX crew worked alongside Kennedy Space Center employees to return the Dragon capsule to the visitor complex.

White Sands Test Facility: Jose Lopez and Eddie Tafoya donned the proper Personal Protective Equipment to work safely within the Orbiter Maneuvering System Engine clean room.

Armstrong Flight Research Center: LeRoy Marsh used an Electrostatic Discharge chair, mat and strap while inspecting a card as part of his Quality Assurance duties in the shipping and receiving area.

NASA employees have been caught demonstrating safety procedures, reinforcing the proper use of safety equipment and encouraging others to practice safe behaviors. See someone using good safety measures? Snap a photo and submit it to the Safety Culture web page! sma.nasa.gov/CDR

NASA Headquarters: Ken Hodgdon practiced putting out a fire with a digital fire extinguisher simulator in a training class.

Langley Research Center: Langley employees shot a utility tunnel safety video.

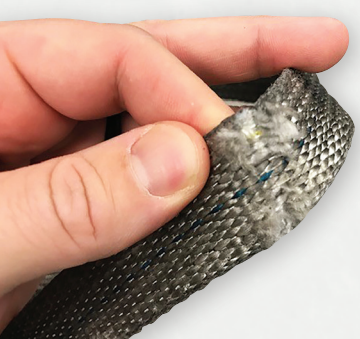

Johnson Space Center: Darvon Collins performed the weekly inspection and activation on a laboratory's plumbed eyewash and shower unit.

Marshall Space Flight Center: Christopher Tyler initiated the repavement of a parking lot after he identified a section where the earth had been washed out under the pavement and curb at a gas line.

Ames Research Center: Jonathan Meyer-Shen addressed a spill outside his office by bringing out the yellow caution sign and cleaning up the spill right away.

Goddard Space Flight Center: Steve Gauss noticed a synthetic web sling with abrasions, pulled it from service, and returned it to the center Lifting Devices and Equipment Manager.